"Primal Wound": Real or Myth? Why do some children adopted in infancy get into serious trouble (e.g., attempted suicide, sexual promiscuity, drug abuse, or criminal arrests) as teenagers? Nancy Verrier presented a possible explanation. According to her books, a primal wound develops when a baby and his mother are separated by adoption shortly after childbirth. Severing their connection, which began in the uterus, causes this wound.

The So-Called "Primal Wound"

The primal wound makes its mark on lives when parents are not accessible, either emotionally, or physically. Little by little the mind of that baby, and then the same child when he is a few years old, is invaded by anxiety, hunger, emotional craving, emptiness, loneliness, loss and lack of protection.
