Phenomenology On Kant German Idealism

German idealism was a philosophical movement that emerged in Germany in the late 18th and early 19th centuries. It developed out of the work of Immanuel Kant in the 1780s and 1790s, and was closely linked both with Romanticism and the revolutionary politics of the Enlightenment.

The thesis of this chapter consists in putting forward the idea that, from the point of view of their speculative foundation, the works of the founding fathers of phenomenology (Husserl and Heidegger) admit of a unity, the nature of which is clarified by certain crucial contributions from German idealism.

Phenomenology and German Idealism - Oxford Handbooks

Kant's idealism is, perhaps, the most moderate form of idealism associated with German idealism. Kant holds that the objects of human cognition are transcendently ideal and empirically real. They are transcendently ideal, because the conditions of the cognition human beings have of objects are to be found in the cognitive faculties of human beings.

The Phenomenology of Spirit (German: Phänomenologie des Geistes) (1807) is Georg Wilhelm Friedrich Hegel's most widely discussed philosophical work; its German title can be translated as either The Phenomenology of Spirit or The Phenomenology of Mind.Hegel described the work as an "exposition of the coming to be of knowledge". This is explicated through a necessary self-origination and ...

The Phenomenology of Spirit - Wikipedia

Hegel constructed his Phenomenology directly upon Kant's Transcendental Idealism. Kant developed the triadic method of Thesis-Antithesis-Synthesis. Hegel didn't use those terms, but he used the triadic method (and he used the terms, Abstract-Negative-Concrete). Hegel was keen to give Kant credit for the triadic method.

As a case in point, in this essay I argue that German Idealism has had a fundamental but unacknowledged impact on contemporary philosophy of mind and cognition, via the concept of intentionality. More specifically, I trace, unpack and then critically evaluate this impact by looking at how the theory of intentionality that is built into Kant's transcendental idealism fundamentally influenced two central figures in the Phenomenological tradition, Brentano and Husserl.

The term "phenomenology" had been coined by the Swiss mathematician (and Kant correspondent) J.H. Lambert (1728-1777) in his The New Organon of 1764, and in a letter to Lambert, sent to accompany a copy of his Inaugural Dissertation (1770), Kant had proposed his own project of a "general phenomenology" as a necessary propaedeutic presupposed by the science of metaphysics.

German Idealism: Hegel (Introduction)

The philosophy of German idealism arose to challenge the Enlightenment's skeptical, materialist, empiricist, and antimetaphysical worldview. German idealist philosophers sought thereby to restore reason to its former preeminence and grandeur as the universal tool through which human understanding of reality is possible.
